"Just before 12 o'clock, sir." "Who brought it?"

"A young woman, sir," said Brown, in a tone of disgust. "A bold thing, aloud.

"Me, sir!" squeaked Mrs. Sampson.

"Me, s ut. 'Is he in?' 'Get says, 'or I'll call the perlice.' 'Oh, no. you won't.' says she. 'You'll give him that,' and she shoves a letter into my hands. 'Who's him?' I asks. 'I dunno,' she answers. 'It's written there, and I can't read; give it him at once.' And then she clears out before I could stop

"And the letter was for Mr. Fitzmerald ?"

"And the letter was for Mr. Fits-gerald!"

"Yes, str; and a precious dirty letter it, was, too."

"You gave it to him, of course?"

"You have it to him, of course?"
